President Spends Day at the Fair.

Thousands of People Welcome the Chief Magistrate.

Liberal Arts Building the First One of the Great Structures

ST. LOUIS. Nov. 26.-Never bave more perfect conditions prevailed since the opening of the World's fair than hose that marked today, which was devoted to a tour through the exposition by President Roosevelt, accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt, Miss Alice Roosevelt and members of the President's party. It was strictly a day of pleasure and not the slightest incident to mar the perfect enjoyment of the occasion.

The heralded announcement that the Nation's Chief Executive would visit the exposition drew tremendous throngs, the exposition drew fremendous throngs, and to guard him from possible danger that might menace him, secret service men, soldiers and police guards abound-ed, but they had comparatively little to do in preserving order.

The sentiment seemed to be unanimous in the minds of the thousands of mous in the minds of the thousands of spectators that President Rossevelt was the guest of each one, and each did his lest to preserve order. The consequence was that these in authority had only to designate their wishes and instantly crowds parted, passaceways were cleared and hindrances quickly removed that every moment of the President's limited time wight he acquired in viewing ited time might be occupied in viewing

President Greatly Pleased.

"This is marvelous," he said. 'It is beyond description and exceeds my fondest expectations. I have had the test time I have ever had in my life, and I have seen more than I ever expected to see in one day's time."

From 10 in the forenoon, when the Liberal Arte building was visited, until 6 in the evening the distinguished visi-tors, following an arranged schedule, jurried from one building to the next, from one part of the grounds to another, and overlooked nothing of interest. From the start to the end of the tour Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Alice accom-panied the President, and fatigue was orgotten in the enjoyment of the day

First Speech of Day.

Mr. Commissioner:—I wish to thank you from my heart for the kind words that you have just spoken. At this exposition the great Republic of France has a peculiarly appropriate part, the great nation whose people worked so much in the past for the discovery and settlement of this continent and the people that took this infant Nation by the hand to help it up into the circle of powers. quickly replied Maj Johnston, smiling.
"Yes, I know," said the President.
"I see now how much good Secretary Taft did in the Philippines. I will make an effort to have your battallon attend the inaugural in Washington."
Maj. Johnston thanked the President warmly assuring him that all the effective drill of your battallon, which

Visit Roosevelt Cabin. A hurried visit was made to the American building and thence to the Roosevelt cabin, which sheltered the President in former days on the ranch. He evinced the greatest interest in the old log structure, and pointed out to Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Alice a buffalo skin hanging within as having come from the first buffalo he had ever

The rest of the day was spent in the Philippines reservation. Guards had cleared the area of visitors, and the entire place was given over to inspecthon by the Presidential party. Passing into the Moro village adjoining, the President was met by Datto Facunda, who presented him with a big knife, saying through an interpreter:

The visitors then entered carriages and were driven to Machinery hall. The night had advanced, and it was decided to spend little time in Machinery hall, as the President was to attend a banquet later in the evening. Goes Over Several Months.

President's Address.

I count it indeed a privilege to have had the chance of visiting this marvelous exposition. I cannot sufficiently express my appreciation of its wonder and its beauty. It is, in fact, as you, President Francis, have said, the greatest exposition of its kind we have ever seen in recorded history. As I walked today through and among the buildings and saw what they were; what they signified in the way of achievement at home; what they signified in the way of achievement among these great and friendly nations who are represented here. I had but one regret, and that was a deep regret—the regret that these could not be made permanent; the regret that it is impossible to keep these buildings as they are for our children and our children's children and all who are to come after, as a permanent memorial of the greatness of this country. This outcome taken in connection with the general situation, appears to guarantee that with the opening of spring there will begin a contest far more terrible than any yet fought, and points to the termination of the war in the next campaign. It is still possible that there will be a general attack during the winter, but the weather is now broken and uncertain and seemingly renders it impossible for the troops of either army to abandon their present

Daring Exploits.

All Are Interested.

I think that the American who grudges a dollar that has been spent here is not so far-sighted as he should be. It is a credit to the United States that this exposition should have been carried to such a successful conclusion, and, of course, it is pre-eminently a credit to Misseuri and to St. Louis on behalf of all the people of the country. For each man in the country had a personal stake in the success of this exposition, for its success reflected credit upon the entire country—and therefore, on behalf of the Nation, I will have to express my deep appreciation of the far-sighted, tireless, intelligent, dis interested work that has been done by all who are responsible for this exposition, and more than by all others, by you, President Francis. The hostilities are now characterized by individual exploits of a most daring and dangerous character. One outcome of the close relations between the Russlans and Japanese along the Shakhe river has been the occasional blowing up of houses by the opposing outposts and the sntping of their occupants. Under Debt of Obligation.

The country is under a great debt of obligation to you and your associates, and I am glad of this opportunity to express, however imperfectly, my sense of this obligation. It is a peculiar pleasure to me to come here to see this great exposition, because of what the exposition was. I have always been greatly interested in Missouri, and during the last three weeks. I have grown to think of it, if possible, even more highly than before. A number of years ago I made a particular study of one of the great men whom in time past Missouri has presented to the service of the Nation—old Tom Benton. I have felt that not only I, but every American who had the welfare of the Nation deep at heart, could find very much by which to profit in the career of Benton and his fellows of the Jacksonian Democracy of that day.

The Chinese authorities have taken preliminary steps to bring grain from the North and to store it for the use of the starving farmers and villagers. This action was brought about by the desti-tution which is prevalent for some 20 miles behind the Russian army, which is commandeering all grain and other food supplies, and also because of the fear that the army will move north again, when the Russians will not allow grain to pass through their lines from the Sungari basin which is the main de-pendence of the inhabitants throughout the area devastated by the war.

"It is a curious thing, gentlemen, how as time goes by we are able to see in the men and in the parties of the past features of the utmost usefulness to the country, even though at the time those men or those parties seemed antagonistic, and I wish to say that any good American of the present can find an incalculable amount from which to learn and by which to profit in the principles and practices alike of the Whigs, who followed the lead of Henry Clay of Kentucky, and of those whom they regarded then as the chief foes of those very Whigs—the Democrats, who followed the lead of Andrew Jackson of Tennessee, and of Tom Benton of Missourt, and of Sam Houston of Teas—and perhaps the chief losson to be learned from the lives of all those men is the lesson of a broad Americanism, an Americanism that should teach every man that he is no true American unless the welfare of each of his countrymen is dear to him, and that without the slightest regard as to where that countryman lives.

No nation as great as ours can ex-pect to escape the penalty of greatness, for greatness does not come without trou-ble and labor.

The faculty, the art, the habit of road-building marks in a nation those solid, stable qualities which tell for permanent greatness. There is no worse enemy of the wage-worker than the man who condones mob-violence in any shape, or who preaches class hatred.

There can be no real general prosperity unless based on the foundation of the prosperity of the wage-worker and the tiller of the goll.

It is a fundamental truth that the pros-perity of any people is simply another term for the prosperity of the home-makers among that people.

Cites Address of Lincoln.

"Gentlemen, I was reading the other day a speech made by Abraham Lincoln a couple of days after he was re-slected to the Presidency, and I cannot quote it verbally, but it ran somewhat like this: 'As long as I have been in this office I have never willingly planted a thorn in any man's bosom. I am gratified greatly that my countrymen (I am quoting from Lincoln) have seen fit to continue me in office, but it does not add to my satisfaction that any one else is pained by the result. Those were the words of Lincoln in 18C and I feel that any man who even tiles to be fit to be President of the United States should approach his duties in a spirit that any man worthy of serving the people not in that position, but in any position of weight in public life should have that sense of relation that everything personal in his triumph does not leasen the sense of highlite responsibility thereby cast upon him and the weight of the duty he owes to all of his fellow citzens and he should realize that whatever the differences among our people before decision once the election has taken Every man must be guaranteed his liberty and his right to do as he likes with his property or his labor, so long as he does not infringe the rights of others.

This country has and this country needs better-paid, better-ducated, better-fed and better-clothed workingmen of a higher type than are to be found in any foreign country. Labor organizations, when managed in-telligently and in a spirit of justice and fair play, are of very great service not only to the wage-workers, but to the only to the wage whole community The first great object of the forest reserves is, of course, the first great object of the whole land policy of the United States—the creation of homes, the favoring of the home-maker.

The western half of the United States would sustain a population greater than that of our whole country today if the waters that now run to waste were saved and used for irrigation.

We are not to be excused if we selfishly sit down and enjoy gifts that have been given to us and do not try to share them with our poorer fellows coming from every part of the world.

Let us speak courteously, deal fairly and keep ourselves armed and ready. If we do these things, we can count on the peace that comes to the just man armed, to the just man who neither fears nor inflicts wrong.

While citizens die, the Government and the Nation do not die, and we are bound in dealing with the forests to exercise the foresight necessary to use them now, but to use them in such a way as will also keep them for those who are to come after Maxims of Theodore Roosevelt.

American wage-workers work with their heads as well as their hands.

Organization is one of the laws of our social and economic development at this time.

No action by the State can do more than supplement the initiative of the individual and ordinarily the action of the State can do no more than to secure to each individual the chance to show under as favorable conditions as possible the stuff that there is in him.
